GUESS WHAT, YOU SHORT SIGHTED “BIG NOSE” DAY-TRADING —AS MEASURED IN HFT NANO MOMENTS— “CHINA WATCHERS” STIRRING A HOT STOCK POT SOUP FOR THE EMPIRE OF SHORT SELLING GOLD. YOU HAVE BEEN SO TOTALLY HAD.

You paper trading tigers actually believe that Communist Party Hero Karl Marx's doctrine of an anti-Capitalist, “Gold is an evil curse,” was not part of China's “Great Leap Forward,” of a very stoic people where five year plans were only measured in seconds, who somehow today have actually come from way, way, behind, to slowly earn the world wide “Number One” position in gold by making money the old-fashioned way of working hard instead of just playing a computerized futures game?

But Then What Derivative Salesman Actually Has The Time To Listen To Due Diligence History?

Know that from a ‘People of the Han’ viewpoint of the last 200 years, some of the Chinese gold mined —but not mined out— in the Bureaucratic Bankrupt Golden State of California, is finally sailing “home” in off-the-radar wooden junks.

The oh so very clever Chinese totally understand it has been written that a gold/silver backed currency since the days of King Solomon has been the power that economically rules, creating the “American dream,” or as Communist Party and military chief Xi Jinping series of speeches keeps referring to as the coming “China Dream!” And why not, in a world struggling to feed 98 percent of the world's population, champion a stable reserve currency not involved in the political destabilization failure of the IMF and counter-productive commodities speculation of a European “market basket” mix of pretty pieces of paper?

These “New Chinese,” and other Asian investors, know that this power has been following the natural spin of our planet Earth — where commodities as pumped, harvested, and mined, may to be the only true wealth of a reality spread sheet.

This power of a physical gold and silver being on everyone’s babbling tongue has migrated westward from the towers of Babylon, to Egypt, to Greece, to Rome, to the Londinium of LME/LIBOR fame, and finally to a “Cross of Gold America” America where FDR made the mistake of signing an emergency WWII Executive Order E-208, closing down away the future momentum of gold mining in defense of protecting the economy of these United States of America(?).

As in the Territory of Alaska —only defended by Alaskan natives and gold prospectors— which was shortly thereafter was invaded by the Empire of Japan, which in reality may have actually been the first step across the International Dateline where the Karma of Yin and Yang, and the the Divine Rights of Kings, totally clashed.

The East may have finally won their deceptive Boxer Rebellion against the arrogant invasion by Colonial Powers supporting opium powered drug cartels. Which sadly — as I am somewhat known as a “horseback historian” who writes the truth as I see it from the saddle— included America’s Captain Jink’s Horse Marines last U.S. Calvary ride to the rescue of a yet another British Empire confrontation, before the machine guns of August 1914 altered the art of heroic charges forever.

Unless, that is, one considers the recent poetic charge of a a lightheaded bankers brigade, ignoring the credit default swap bugle calls to retreat from the valley of death, by stampeding right over a fiscal cliff.

Who Then Is Still Listening To The Sexy Siren Songs Of ‘Hong-Konger Tong’ Schisms, Over Historical Fact?

Legitimate non-in-”Canadian-Intrests-43-101” American prospectors have a saying, “Don’t bend your pick,” which has to do with defending your reputation for assaying the truth about mining claims.

I, since the excitement of the Great Uranium Rush of ‘55 to Moab Utah, as 16 year old minor-miner, where I ironically was stiffed on my last summer employment paycheck by a Canadian mining corporation that even then had a Hong Kong money flow through London. In my 60 years experience since that a full 60 percent of the “wool stocking” mining projects I have personally been associated with somehow have fallen apart by “silk stocking” money management that finds it easier to pretend through press releases to actually mine mining investors instead of singing the seven dwarfs song Hi Ho, Off To (physical) Work I Go.

I do not want to bend my pick bragging about being a “China Expert,” as I only have 77 years experience cheering Flying Tiger John Wayne in a “B” Republic Pictures film patting a WW2 Allied “Lucky China Boy” on the head with a thumbs-up “Ding How”.

And a pride that Lieutenant General Claire Lee Chennault had taken great pleasure in bombing a Hong Kong luxury British owned hotel in sort of a payback to The Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere occupation at the time, for the Rape of Nanking.

Some of my “research” of Chennault vs: Tojo’s troops — who used a samurai sword to behead a great uncle U.S. Army Colonel on the Bataan Death March — led to my Japanese gold tale of Code:YellowChrysanthemum, an E-novel available online.

Continuing on with my credentials, speaking of famous Generals, somehow The Oregon Kid who knew how to read a topographic map ended up in London, with a one step above Top Secret clearance working directly for Curtis LeMay in a U.S. Air Force photo intelligence unit that knew ...sorry, that is still protected from Wikileaks publication. And I still have nightmares over how very close we came to destroying our Planet. The little bit I can share about “Mainland China” was lazing with MI6 over their spy, code name “The Traveler,” whose contribution to “World Peace” was sticking a Minnox spy cam out of a Chinese train, only producing almost unusable images of the same scenes tourists today bore neighbors and water-cooler friends with today.

A much better source of intelligence was a year spent shortly after The Cultural Revolution at the University of Victoria, where thanks to gift of a carbon steel wok from an American born “China Doll” that almost become a daughter-in-law, I was invited to play a professors game (he supplied the fresh ingredients) of a fun Asian iron chef contest with a gang of five Peoples Republic grad students. We all won by setting down to totally enjoy dining as friends in the style of the greatest banquets since the Judge Dee stories out of the Ming Dynasty.

Sorry about that literary reference, but I also have known since covering the cuisine of Chinatown as a Lo-faun, Inkapay swilling, contributing photojournalist for San Francisco Magazine, that while American Chinese do not understand the secret of making your Emperor's Bones fish dish, or more importantly of late, a cinematic Sizzling Beef Balls with black bean sauce, we really do understand the significance of the wisdom of dealing with the subtleties of a five-spice culture— which has become a mainstay of the 76 percentile favorite of immigrant cuisune, over Italian, Mexican, Greek, etc.

So then, perhaps my most meaningful understanding of East/West connections came about through the foreign listing of a non-43-101 verified American mining claims [www.WesternMiner.com] for sale / lease / joint (wink,wink) venture contracts totally controlled by British Columbia Queens Bench securities lawyers supporting a yet-another-mining stock TSX “pump and dump promotion”, in violation of the principals of “free trade”, or a “favored nation” ploy of selling US EB-5 green card visas that really shows that the China gold threat is really a battle between financial control freaks on both sides of the Pacific.

The Trend in American Resources is Really West to East, Instead of North to Canada's TSX Ventures ?

I actually have had the privilege of presenting, former party cadre bosses of Communistic mining corporations, desperately searching for a supply side positions in American natural feed stocks as iron ore, among other minerals as silica, in Nevada, etc.

Case in point was hosting my own one signature owned, industrial mountain of mineral of Nepheline.com presentation to Board Chairman Wang, out of Qingdao who actually climbed a slippery rock wall in slick bottom shoes to verify the validity of geologists reports.

It was drizzling that day as I drove him and his interpreter up the mountain that looks down on the new loading facilities of Newport, Oregon, through a third growth rainforest that had helped win World War I by supplying Sitka Spruce for the high tech fighter planes of the time. The memorable part of the day was the Canadian-Chinese interpreter with the same name as a million Chinese, was so impressed by the luxurious third growth of Dougie Fir trees that he actually got mad.

“How come,” he shouted to be understood over the meshing of a FWD transfer case, as some almost rude Chinese old-school war lords business-person carry overs can do, “You no share your trees to build houses?” I had great pleasure in stopping and shouting back — “See that stump over there, deep in a sustainable living forest. It is called a stump, as that is what is left years ago when a tree had been harvested to build houses to shelter mankind.”

The point of this exchange is that while my material proved to have too much iron to compete in the world wide glass business. Thank goodness as a Chinese researcher later identified my iron rich nepheline as a superior clean-air steel making flux. And, a few years after this East/West encounter the Port of Newport, suddenly approved a rotation of four specially designed Chinese flag carriers to export Oregon logs to a favored trade nation.

I am not opposed to helping fellow Pacific Rim country neighbors developing with a US renewable resources, and I have no problem with exporting a shareable portion of a unique 700 million ton reserve of nepheline for rock wool production. What is not very nice is the money people of the former British Colony of Hong Kong, in a BC & Canadian conspiracy of lawyers dragging Alaska claim holders, bleeding over rocks our own rocks to the poorhouse.

As said “councilors” in league with TSX 43-101 style pump and dump promoters, to even suggest that American miners are so incompetent they need to be replaced — to fill the void— thanks to the opinion of LA lawyers who think it within the law to sell EB-5 “Green Card” visas to Asians over the Internet.

I suggest, as a mining lawyer's son who worked his way through grade school as a 25¢ per hour office boy that a big Vancouver firm “liar liar” who

Some real life follow-ups are on my “personally experienced” Alaska-Mining.com anger of wanting to punch a few Canadian finance professionals in their poofy TSX nose does not reflect a yet another U.S. “fair trade complaint,” Why? Because good neighbor fellow worker class BC miners somehow mustered enough clout recently to have hundreds of Chinese “guest workers” sent home in spite of protests from the British (Columbia) yacht people from Hong Kong buying a CDN million dollar Canadian citizenship— apparently the sole purpose of multinational banksters control freak advantages.

Another reason I am sympathetic to West Coast Canadians is that recently according to a CBC newscast that —”Ottawa is contemplating the possibility of a Canadian bank failure — and the same sort of pitiless prescription that was just imposed in Cyprus.” And according to the Wall Street Journal — “ the ratio of credit-market debt to disposable income, from Statistics Canada, reached a record high of almost 165% in the fourth quarter.

That makes household borrowing look like Mt. Everest—particularly when compared to the dwindling debt of the retrenching U.S.” About time you “cheese heads” spring cleaned that household, eh? Which according to a developing trend their Supreme Court decisions may be actually concerned with what is actually happening to mining investors.

As Hong Kong is closer to Wilderness Alaska, than NYC Foey Young Eggspurts, please Let Me Suggest...

Relax over the recent “the Asian red sky is falling” rhetoric. Mute your TV breaking news at eleven commentator's opinion concerning the uninhabited island dispute we are somehow supposed to get involved paying the price for the national defense of Japan? We actually lived through the drama of the Nixon-Kennedy debate over the Pescadores Islands conflict. Surely the U.S. can survive the trash talk over another almost to small to defend island? Did not General Mac Arthur get fired for unwisely threatening North Korea, Manchuria, and China with nuclear attacks? His former aide Major Eisenhower was smart enough to advise “Do not get involved in a ground war in Asia,” So, perhaps it is time to let protected trade dollar rich Samsung take over the U.S. Taxpayer defense of all of Korea by designing a smart phone app, just for that — so we can bring home U.S. troops, in Harms’s Way since 1953. As political pundit Jay Leno recently stated, there is absolutely no way China is going to let American Wallmarts be destroyed!

That, however, is not the debate to answer my initial question about a golden Yuan, further devaluating the Hong Kong Dollar — with a recent value quoted as $0.16, and an even a even smaller fraction of what used to be a British currency measured in actual Pounds of Sterling Silver. As I have never taken a water taxi out to one of those fabulous fresh fish floating restaurants, please call up any “China watcher qualified financial experts” in physical gold, as related anyway to explain away China’s stealthy ninja miners, to help me understand the big picture of a golden sun setting through the trees of an American’s Brenton Woods USD forest, where a “Big Five” China had signed on as part of the system regulate the fairness of an international monetary system exchange. Did not the U.S. Army ping-pong hero Nathan Bedford Forrest Gump come back from Nixon’s Trade Mission to a place called Peking with a quote, “Stupid is as stupid does,” which really was a loose translation of Sun Tzu’s, “The supreme art of war is to subdue the enemy without fighting?”

In a Forrest Gump style, I would like some Accurate, Publishable Answers on the Historical Wisdom of:

- 1) Just as Empress Dowager Cixi did not order Chinese Imperial troops during the Boxer Rebellion to protect the Forbidden City from invasion, perhaps the SAR for offshore banking British Colony of Hong Kong surviving today, defined further as the Special Administrative Region of the People’s Republic of China, might have just a little something to do with the The Hong kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation Limited [HSBC] being fined $1.9 billion for supporting drug lords and terrorists.

According to a USA Today article “ the British banking giant... used to to settle a money-laundering probe by federal and state authorities,” for the stupidly of Hong Kong doing the dirty “China-man” laundering of drug and terrorist money from other places in this world that have already been ‘mucked up’ by the ‘flaming twits’ in control of the the English Financial Empire. Isn’t it interesting in an Asian ‘fruits’ of karma accounting that the HSBC Hong Kong Dollar is selling for 13 ¢ US, at a time they are looking to futures market funding of “colonial” American retirement plans?

2) Or is that the offshore banking system of the former British Empire Crown Colony Xianggang, just a salted and pickled a red herring whose goal was for the Hong Kong Exchanges & Clearing Ltd. to purchase the all powerful London Metal Exchange for a mere 1.39 billion pounds of paper backed Sterling Silver? This in part to stand between buyers and sellers to reduce the risk of London’s too big to fail LME/LIBOR coming gold and silver ETF defaults.

Surely HSBC well knows regulators have been asking exactly where the gold bullion bars of “London Prime Bank” schemes (as identified by our own SEC) of banking futures derivatives, might actually be stored? Did not HSBC sell assets and liabilities of its branch in Nicosia —capital of yet-another former offshore British Crown Colony— to the Cyprus Popular Bank Public Company Limited, just in time to keep the Russians from getting really, really mad at them?

3) And as lately their have been reports of “Hong Kong gold” actually being smuggled past mainland Chinese border guards to end up safely in the People’s Bank of China (PBOC) which raises the question of what does this mean about the future of the SAR? Considering that the gold rich Brazil-Russia-India-CHINA-South Africa (BRICS ... as in actual gold bricks?) nations fighting the insanity of the so called IMF PIGS, are looking at a mineral rich Australia to join a gold backed system, once they say goodbye to the world’s “paper reserve currency.” Perhaps patriotic American golden rule investors should hedge their bets against “casino capitalism” by buying bullion bars they can safely stored back in the ground. As advised by many of the approved advertising partners I trust who support my wild ranting which really is only source of online income chatting about “gold.”

Or, go direct as an individual to other individual mining claim holders, bypassing securities approved stockbrokers, through our www.MiningMagazines.com, or www.WesternMiner.com database of mining properties we list for a $300-500 onetime fee. That is if we validate them for not waving their arms in Vancouver/Toronto Stock Exchange style 43-101 approved “pump and dump” press releases, or are part of a “dark pool” private investment trading platforms, largely hidden from public view.

Know, however those of us Internet content providers from the supply side of mining simply looking for drilling and development funding, as experienced through a validity of my personally owned www.SilverMiningClaims.com, and www.NephelineSyenite.com, have totally been under attack by “dark pool” online spoofs, phishing frauds, spam from nameless “concerned environmentalists,” and all the other prankster tricks that just may crash the Internet itself. Because of this if you cannot get through to Editor@MiningMagazines.com, then try some of the other e-mail addresses sprinkled across this page, or go directly to the lone individual I trust for the truth in mining investment advertising, myself, Barry Murray / BarryMurray@TheProspector.com / 541-272-0554.

Recent Updates and Validations to my Thoughts by other deep-in-the-dark underground “Supply Side Suppliers,” or the for real, physical, “Hard Money” Bullion Boys who seem to understand that the safest way to store the values of Gold and Silver, that doesn’t pay leveraged interest, is to lock it right back up in an underground vault, and hold on to the key!

It is not paranoia to report to my readers that the publishing of this First Amendment Protected Editorial Opinion has been totally attacked by HFT “paper mining finance experts” who perhaps are worried about paying income and CTT or STT taxes on insanely brief, churned stock transactions that have absolutely no benefit to American mining, and the recovery of the USA economy totally trashed by the ineradicably out of touch with Reality Economics “Bubble Heads.” To keep those on the side of fiscal sanity from also being slandered, I am just going to steal some of their copyright protected opinions without attribution here in the hope investors will do their own homework through an online keyword Boolean search for something as, “Chinese women aren’t taking Buffett’s advice on gold.” Might I suggest that:

1) “This might strike a conservative investor as reckless. But in China, where gold has long been a national obsession, a mid-April record crash in global gold prices has been seen as an unprecedented buying opportunity. According to reports in China, Chinese [house wives] have purchased 300 tons of gold worth more than $16 billion since the crash.”

2) “China Opens New Front in Currency War as Yuan Speculation Distorts Export Data. China’s central bank signaled on Wednesday it was prepared to change its monetary strategy to fend off inflows of speculative capital, as Beijing struggles to control a tide of cash washing in from overseas markets.”

3) “Hong Kong gold retailers overwhelmed by mainland shoppers. Hong Kong retailers report they were swamped over the three-day May Day holiday by tens of thousands of mainlanders in search of one thing: cheap gold.”

4) “The jump in Chinese physical demand also prompted some banks to ship in more supplies from London and Swiss vaults, traders said.”

5) “Chinese gold imports are likely to swell further after more than doubling to an all time high in March as retail consumers pounced when prices plunged to a two-year low last month. China is the world’s second largest buyer after India, and in both countries the steep fall in international gold prices in April unleashed years of pent up demand for coins, bars and jewelry

That will help bolster prices for the metal, which has been abandoned by funds in other parts of the world in the wake of its historic fall.”

6) “Gold production by U.S. mines was down 8% in February from 18,300 kilograms (588,358 troy ounces) in February 2012 to 16,900 kilograms (543,347 oz’s) this year, the U.S. Geological Survey reported in its Mineral Industry Survey.

This comes on the heels of a 10% drop in January of this year from 19,800 kilograms (636,584 oz’s) in January 2012 to 17,900 kilograms (575,498 oz’s).”

7) “Gold-exploration has been particularly weak, with activity reported from just 172 prospects in March, compared with 199 in February, 350 in January and 382 in March 2012. Last month’s gold activity is still better, however, than the nadir of 157 prospects reported in December,” the group writes. While the number of [US] drills turning at gold prospects fell in absolute terms during the quarter, the search for the yellow metal continues to dominate the overall figures. During the quarter 651 gold projects reported drilling activity, IntierraRMG says, as compared to only 192 copper projects, 154 silver projects, 63 zinc projects and 42 lead projects.”

8) “The biggest slump in gold prices in more than three decades on April 15 spurred banks, traders and jewelers to import more than 100 tons last month, said Rajesh Khosla, managing director of MMTC-PAMP India Pvt. Purchases this month will match April’s imports, he said. MMTC-PAMP’s refinery in northern Indian state of Haryana can process 100 tons of gold, 600 tons of silver and make 2.5 million pieces of coins a year, he said.”

9) “Gold-hungry China braces for surge in imports. Chinese gold imports are likely to swell further after rising strongly for a second straight month in March, as investors seek safety from economic uncertainty and after prices plunged to a two-year low last month. Physical demand picked up significantly over the last couple of weeks. Consumers and industrial users tend to see price drops as buying opportunities,” Zhang Bingnan, secretary-general of the China Gold Association, told Reuters.”

10) “China produces 90 tonnes, consumes 320 tonnes in Q1-2013. World’s largest gold producer and second largest consumer China’s total gold usage reached 320.54 metric tonnes in the first quarter, China Gold Association said.”

11) “But for the gold believer the migration of gold from West to East is a concern. It is believed that China wants the yuan to have at least a role in the next global reserve currency in a recognition of the trade advantages that have accrued to the U.S. over the years through the dollar being the reserve currency for much of the past century. It is thought that it feels that domination of the gold market may be the key here, and the way things are going at the moment China could well be on the way to achieving this.”

12) “Chinese gold imports are likely to swell further after more than doubling to an all time high in March as retail consumers pounced when prices plunged to a two-year low last month. China is the world’s second largest buyer after India, and in both countries the steep fall in international gold prices in April unleashed years of pent up demand for coins, bars and jewelry

That will help bolster prices for the metal, which has been abandoned by funds in other parts of the world in the wake of its historic fall.”

13) “Amman: Robert Mundell, an economist and a 1999 Nobel Prize winner, and current professor at Columbia University and advisor to the Chinese government, has called for a new global currency, saying that the dollar era had “gone with the wind”. He calls for a new international “cocktail or basket of major world currencies”.

14) “The [North American] gold mining industry, for the most part, is dumber than the rocks it digs out of the ground. Too dumb to defend itself, purporting to be represented by the World Gold Council, which exists only to make sure that there never is a real world gold council.”

15) And so sorry that I cannot keep up with all the news out of Hong Kong by stealing others written comments. Perhaps I should give back to our small community by sending you right along to a newsletter writer braver than I for allowing HSBC banner advertising.

16) Another update: “This is a manipulation of the paper market, not of the physical market. Gold is still being looted from the ETF’s such as GLD, and physical gold continues to hemorrhage from Western central bank vaults to Eastern vaults. If they are selling in places like the U.S., you can be sure they are buying in places like Shanghai. That’s where your physical gold is going to end up if you are selling today, is China. “

17) “After mulling over the situation for days, I have finally decided that, in deference to my subscribers, the best position for me is to have no position in the market. As soon as you buy stocks, the normal sentiment is to want the market to go up. I don’t want to be in the position of wanting the market to go up or down. I want to be emotionally neutral and basically realistic. Therefore, the only position I will own will be gold. I have not added or subtracted gold from my position in a long time, nor will I. I treat gold like my home. It’s a tangible asset, and I don’t trade it. - Richard Russell...17 June 2013.”

18) OK. I give up. This is my last “foolish” comment on “China Gold.” I am an old magazine man that knows what I learned at LIFE, and a Editor and Publisher of a gloss print ECONOMICS CURRENTS Magazine that is was the READER that truly owns a editorial publication... as this... that should not be considered a SEC approved yet-another-pennyshopper-advertising-website. My www.MiningMagazines.com opinions, including this page, seems to have touched a nerve concerning the message I have for American mining investors interested in physical gold and silver, instead of paper.

With the publication of this particular article I have been plagued with spam and spoof sites that apparently don't agree with what my supposedly supportive third party advertisers are selling. That is with the exception of American mining equipment suppliers, and American coin and bullion dealers.

The spammers may have shown a stupidity by going a bit too far, running what used to be a “sideline” revenue in keyword advertising on this site, down to $0.01 a day. Might I humbly suggest to certain third-party placed keyword banner advertisers, pretending to support the American mining point of view over that of Hong Kong / Kanada Korporations [KKK], that I waste a lot of time blocking, might have better luck fishing for suckers in a more global investment “Internet Branded” marketplace.

Perhaps this spam E-mail from “Larry,” I just received at the long established www.MiningMagazines.com (American), passed along intact here with his address, might work better for them getting their own words published about mining opportunities. As global mining investments are so much more important than American ventures, we wish the following “the best of British luck” in their readership:

19) Yes I know I said that I couldn't allow my blood pressure to spike, as a simple "fortress" American miner worrying about exporting our gold and silver (the really critical precious metal) to a people that actually only want to survive. Consider, then in an explanation for the people who invest in mining, to what really is happening with dangerous gold exploitation/manipulation World wide, these latest words from the New York Times, via Ed Steers:

“Text message solicitations began arriving on the mobile phones of many of China’s wealthy last month, promising access to lucrative wealth management products with yields far above the government’s benchmark savings rate.

The offers are not coming from fly-by-night operators but some of China’s biggest banks. They are raising huge pools of cash to finance a relatively new and highly profitable sideline business: lending outside the scrutiny of bank regulators.

The complex way they go about making off-the-balance-sheet loans is at the heart of China’s $6 trillion shadow banking industry, which the government is now trying to tame. Efforts to rein in the dodgy lending practices rattled stock markets worldwide in late June.”

20) And this from Mineweb, a source known for their uncromprising independence, on China’s Gold Imports...” If the demand continues at this kind of level, with stocks of physical gold continually moving from vulnerable western hands ...there will be a very apparent shortage of physical metal in the West. Increasingly gold trading will move from exchanges like COMEX to Shanghai and Hong Kong. COMEX may become an effective irrelevance in the gold market dealing only in ‘paper’ gold (which it effectively is already) and the physical gold price momentum will move to the east... then it will be a wholly different ball game!”

Sorry... I keep wanting to ad quotes from Kingworldnews.com, via Ed Steers “physical” metals Reader’s Digest style newsletter:

“Today one of the savviest and well connected hedge fund managers in the world shocked King World News by taking us once again on a trip down the rabbit hole that was nothing short of breathtaking. Outspoken Hong Kong hedge fund manager William Kaye spoke with KWN about the missing Fed and German gold, where it has gone, and how much gold the People’s Bank Of China (PBOC) really owns. This interview is going to stun readers around the world. Kaye, who 25 years ago worked for Goldman Sachs in mergers and acquisitions, had this to say in part I of his remarkable interview.

Kaye: “Global hegemony (leadership or dominance) is changing in a way that most people don’t fully comprehend. This area of the world, the Asia-Pacific, China in particular, is positioning itself to be the leading global power as we look out over the next five to ten years.

My sources tell me that contrary to the public numbers that are available, China has anywhere between 4,000 to possibly 8,000 tons of (physical) gold.... “

22) And speaking of Ed Steers, after all the hassle “supply side” www.MiningMagazines.com has experienced via an undefined “Internet War” have experienced, I really have to admire the brave bullion bullish statements of Mr. Steers for this:

“Shanghai Sees Global Status Via New Free-Trade Zone

Shanghai officials are banking on its role as the mainland’s first free-trade zone to put the city among the world’s top financial centres.

Under the plan, endorsed by the State Council on Wednesday, Shanghai is expected to allow companies to freely convert foreign exchange within specified areas of the city while allowing free capital and commodity inflow for the entire city.

Shanghai officials are banking on its role as the mainland’s first free-trade zone to put the city among the world’s top financial centres.

Under the plan, endorsed by the State Council on Wednesday, Shanghai is expected to allow companies to freely convert foreign exchange within specified areas of the city while allowing free capital and commodity inflow for the entire city.

Shanghai’s ambitions to become the nation’s economic engine, leap-frogging Hong Kong as the dominant financial hub in the region are an open secret. The long-awaited policy incentive granted by the cabinet will only add heft to the city’s attempts to attract global capital and talent.”

23) And I have to add to this commentary, that of Monday Morning guest writer Frank Holmes’s piece The Asian Giant Stampeding into Gold, which has a chart that even unsophisticated investors can figure out the truth of the matter, if they think about the facts.

24) And I also have to defend myself here from acquiring a reputation lower than a Vancouver, British Columbia Press Release fabricator by also worrying about what is happening to gold mining, tied to silver, and base metals (how exactly does one float a lead balloon?) as is being reported by Reuters of London:

“Shanghai Gold, Silver Volumes Hit Records in After-Hours Trade

Trading volumes for gold and silver on the Shanghai Futures Exchange [ShFE] have jumped to record highs a week after the bourse launched after-hours trading, driven by a surge in investment and hedging demand. The ShFE, China’s biggest commodity exchange by contract value, launched night trading on July 5 to give investors a tool to manage risk during trading hours in London and New York. The extended hours could give China a better hold in the global gold market and offer a taste of what lies ahead for contracts such as base metals, if the exchange sticks to plans to extend trading hours for other products.”

So there it is Dear Readers. but frankly, if you looking for inside investment tips in mining speculation, those of us on the physical supply side of mining really don’t really give a damn what the phantom paper side [HFT] ETF “mining sector expert” freaks do. for in the long run the true market price of physical gold and silver was really established by free trade laissez-faire, over 5,000 years ago. This page was intended to be an Electronic—Book dust, or fly-leaf, cover in an E- FGHI format , or Fixed Graphic[page] of Hybrid Impressions. This “mini-coffee table” book was designed for handheld HD screens in a typography rich Adobe Acrobat PDF that also can also be used to demand print a high end 7 x 10 inch trim size gloss paper library book.

Fittingly,

Search For A Shadow—a chronicle tale of pioneering the Pacific Crest Trail by a wilderness family riding 2,500 miles from Mexico to Canada— spans from an 1800’s familiar form of transportation, taking mid 1900’s Ekatachrome transparencies, to pushing the 2000’s frontier form of writer’s desktop publishing. A form of control that “folio” photographer Edward Curtis, called the Shadow Catcher Native Americans, would have found invaluable in his multimedia quest to present his “words are pictures / and pictures are words”!

Photographer “Grand-Paw Bear” using 1970’s ASA 160 High Speed Ektachrome . Today’s point and shoot, auto focus, aperture, shutter speed controlled pocket cameras have a ASA rating of 3,200 .
